A comparative study on work related attitudes of operator level employees and supervisors across firms of different ownership in Sri Lanka

Thushari Wanniarachchi
Department of Textile & Clothing Technology, Faculty of Engineering, University of Moratuwa

Dr. Vathsala Wickramasinghe
Department of Management of Technology, Faculty of Engineering, University of Moratuwa

Mr. Nihal Wanigatunge
Department of Textile & Clothing Technology, Faculty of Engineering, University of Moratuwa

E-mails: author1 thushariw@textile.mrt.ac.lk author2 vathsala@mot.mrt.ac.lk author3 nihalw@textile.mrt.ac.lk

Abstract
This study investigates the influences of work related attitudes different ownerships (local, foreign and joint venture) type of firms as well as different employee category (worker level employee and supervisory level employee) in Sri Lankan context. An examination of samples of 200 machine operators and 100 supervisory level employees revealed that there was no significant difference between job satisfaction and organizational commitment of different ownership companies.